Visa processes, requirements, and legal information

Article 1

China Visa Types Explained: Which One Do You Need?

China offers multiple visa categories. Choosing the right one depends on your purpose of visit. Here's a comprehensive breakdown.

L-Visa (Tourist)

For sightseeing, visiting friends/family. Duration: 30-90 days per entry. Single, double, or multiple entry options. Requirements: passport, application form, round-trip tickets, hotel booking or invitation letter.

M-Visa (Business/Trade)

For commercial activities, trade fairs, business meetings. Duration: 30-90 days. Multiple entry options available for frequent travelers. Requires invitation from Chinese trade partner or company.

X-Visa (Student)

X1:

For programs longer than 180 days. Must convert to residence permit within 30 days of arrival.

X2:

For programs shorter than 180 days. Valid for the enrollment period only.

Z-Visa (Work)

For employment in China. Requires Work Permit Notification from employer. Must convert to residence permit within 30 days. See our detailed Z-visa guide for the full process.

R-Visa (Talent)

For high-level foreign talent. Streamlined processing, longer validity (up to 10 years for some nationalities). Requires confirmation of high-level talent status.

Q-Visa (Family Reunion)

Q1:

Long-term (180+ days) for family of Chinese citizens/foreign residents.

Q2:

Short-term (up to 120 days) for visiting family.

S-Visa (Family of Foreign Workers)

For spouses, parents, and children of Z-visa holders working in China.

144-Hour Visa-Free Transit

Available at major airports in Beijing, Shanghai, Guangzhou, Chengdu, and 20+ cities. For citizens of 54 countries transiting through China. No visa needed if you have a confirmed onward ticket to a third country.

How to Extend or Change Your Visa in China

If you need to stay longer or change your visa type while in China, here's what you need to know.

Visa Extension:

Apply at the local Public Security Bureau (Exit-Entry Administration) at least 7 days before your visa expires. Required documents:

- * Valid passport with current visa
- * Registration form of temporary residence
- * Passport-sized photos (48x33mm, white background)
- * Supporting documents (invitation letter, hotel booking, etc.)
- * Application fee: ¥160 (single entry), varies by type

Visa Type Change:

Changing visa type (e.g., L to Z) typically requires leaving China and re-entering with the new visa. However, some changes can be made within China:

- * Tourist (L) to Student (X): Possible with university enrollment documents
- * Tourist (L) to Work (Z): Usually requires exit and re-entry
- * Student (X) to Work (Z): Possible with job offer and Work Permit

Overstay Penalties:

- * Fine: ¥500-1,000 per day of overstay
- * Potential detention and deportation
- * Entry ban: 1-10 years depending on severity
- * Always apply for extension before your visa expires!

A Foreigner's Complete Guide to Work Permits & Visas for China (2025-2026)

Foreigners who wish to work in China must obtain a Foreigner's Work Permit and a work-type residence permit before they can legally begin working. This guide explains the complete process -- from who qualifies, to how to apply, what documents you need, and what to do after you arrive.

Important Update (2025-2026):

The physical Foreigner's Work Permit card has been discontinued. Work permit information is now integrated into the Social Security Card (电子社保卡) for foreign employees.

1. Who Needs a Work Permit?

<blockquote>"Foreigners working in China must obtain a work permit and a work-type residence permit in accordance with regulations. No employer may hire a foreigner who has not obtained a work permit and a work-type residence permit." -- Exit and Entry Administration Law of the PRC, Article 41</blockquote>

The work permit is required for any foreign national working in China

(including teaching, business management, technical roles, research, etc.), regardless of the duration or type of employment.

* Work permits are handled by the

* employer

* (the hiring company/institution), not by the foreigner personally. However, you will need to provide all required documents and cooperate throughout the process.

* The permit is granted to the employer for a specific position --

* not to you as an individual

* . If you change employers or job roles, you must reapply.

2. Three Categories of Foreign Workers (A / B / C)

China classifies foreign workers into three categories based on skills, experience, and national needs.

Category	Who it applies to	Key features
A类 - Foreign High-End Talent	Scientists, tech leaders, top executives, special experts, etc.	No age/education limits; "green channel" processing; 2-5 years validity; fewer document requirements; no numeric limits.
B类 - Foreign Professionals

	Bachelor's degree + ≥ 2 years relevant work experience; age ≤ 60 ; roles needed for economic development	Numeric limits based on market demand; standard documentation; some flexibility for startup talent and outstanding foreign graduates.
--	--	---

C类 - Other Foreign Personnel

	Seasonal workers, interns, and other roles defined by policy	Strict numeric limits; subject to government quota.
--	--	---

Points-based system:

B-class applicants are assessed via a points system (minimum 60 points) based on factors like salary, Chinese language ability, and work experience.

3. Basic Eligibility Requirements (All Categories)

* Age ≥ 18 years

* Good health (no serious infectious diseases)

* No criminal record

* A confirmed employer in China

* Possess the necessary professional skills or qualifications for the job

* The job must align with China's economic development needs

4. Step-by-Step Application Process (for Work Periods >90 Days)

Step 1 -- Employer registers an account online

Your employer must first register on the Foreigners' Work Management Service System \(外国人来华工作管理服务系统\)

. The employer needs to provide their business license, Unified Social Credit Code certificate, and legal representative details. If your employer does not know how to do this, they can engage a licensed agency to handle it on their behalf.

Step 2 -- Online application for the Work Permit Notification

Your employer submits the application and all required documents online to the local Foreign Experts Bureau or relevant government department. Processing time: about 5 working days

. If documents are incomplete, the agency will notify the employer to make corrections.

Step 3 -- Obtain the Work Permit Notification

If approved, the system generates a "Notification Letter of Foreigner's Work Permit"

(外国人工作许可通知). This document is valid for 3 months from the date of issue. ! The Notification Letter is not a visa and cannot be used in place of one.

Step 4 -- Apply for a Z-visa at a Chinese embassy/consulate

Present the following at the nearest Chinese embassy or consulate in your home country:

- * Notification Letter of Foreigner's Work Permit
- * Valid passport (at least 6 months validity remaining)
- * Passport photo
- * Visa application form

The embassy/consulate will issue a

Z-visa

(for foreign employees). In special cases,

R-visas

(for high-end talent) or

F-visas

may be issued.

Step 5 -- Enter China and apply for the physical Work Permit

Within

15 days

of entering China, you (via your employer) must apply to obtain the Foreigner's Work Permit (now integrated into the Social Security Card system). Submit all original documents for verification (original degree certificates, no criminal record certificate, health check report, employment contract). Processing time: about

10 working days

(A-class may be processed faster).

Step 6 -- Apply for a work-type residence permit

Within

30 days

of entry, you must go to the local Public Security Bureau's (PSB) Exit-Entry

Administration Department to apply for a work-type residence permit.

Required documents:

- * Passport with Z-visa

- * Foreigner's Work Permit

- * Employment contract

- * Completed residence permit application form

- * Passport photo

Processing time: Typically

15 working days

(can be processed together with the work permit at "single window" service counters in many cities).

You cannot begin working until you have both the Work Permit and the work-type residence permit in hand.

5. Required Documents -- Complete List

<table class="guide-table">

<thead><tr><th>Document</th><th>Notes</th></tr></thead> <tbody>

<tr><td>Foreigner's Work Permit Application Form</td><td>Completed online, printed, signed, and stamped with employer's seal. Submitted electronically.</td></tr>

<tr><td>Work Experience Certificate</td><td>Issued by previous employer(s); includes position, dates of employment, and contact details. Must bear the employer's seal or signature.</td></tr> <tr><td>Highest Academic Degree/Diploma</td><td>Must be notarized and authenticated by Chinese embassy/consulate in the country of issue, or by apostille certification if the issuing country is a party to the Apostille Convention.

A-class applicants may submit via letter of commitment.

Record Certificate

Issued by police or judicial authorities of your home country. Must be authenticated by Chinese embassy/consulate and dated within the last 6 months. A-class applicants may submit a letter of commitment.

Health Check Certificate

Issued by a Chinese quarantine authority or an overseas medical institution recognized by Chinese authorities. Must be dated within

6 months.

Employment Contract

Must be in Chinese, signed by both parties, and bear the employer's official seal. Must include: job location, job description, salary, start date, and term of employment.

Passport

Must be valid for at least 6 months.

Passport Photo

White background, taken within last 6 months; JPG format, 40-120KB.

Chinese Translation of Non-Chinese

Documents

All documents not originally in Chinese must be accompanied by a Chinese translation, stamped with the employer's official seal (except for the passport).

A-class applicants enjoy reduced documentation requirements (e.g., no criminal record certificate may be submitted via a letter of commitment, no need for physical document verification on arrival).

6. Special Case -- Applying While Already in China (A-class Applicants)

If you are already in China legally (e.g., on a business, tourist, or family visa),

A-class applicants

may apply for the work permit directly from inside China without leaving to obtain a Z-visa overseas. This is not allowed for B-class or C-class applicants unless you fall under other narrow exceptions (e.g., transferring between employers without changing job duties, family members of Chinese citizens or permanent residents, etc.).

! Even for A-class applicants, the work-type residence permit must still be obtained after the work permit is approved.

You cannot work on a tourist or business visa.

7. How Long Does It Take?

Stage	Approximate processing time
Online pre-approval (Notification Letter)	5 working days
Decision on work permit application	20 working days (can be extended by 10 days)
Work permit (after arrival in China)	10 working days
Work-type residence permit	15 working days

Total estimated time

(overseas application to full approval): Approximately

2-3 months

, depending on document preparation and embassy/consulate visa processing times.

days)</td><td>Short-term work/project visits</td></tr> </tbody> </table>

9. Important Legal Notes

- * The work permit

- * cannot be transferred

- * to another employer. If you change companies, you must cancel the existing work permit and apply for a new one.

- * The work permit is

- * not a visa

- * . You must still obtain the appropriate visa (Z/R/F) from a Chinese embassy or consulate before traveling to China.

- * You

- * cannot work

- * until both the Work Permit and the work-type residence permit have been approved.

* Failure to obtain both permits before starting work constitutes

* illegal employment

* and can result in fines, deportation, and a ban on re-entry.

* Your employer must apply for work permit extension

* at least 30 days before

* it expires.

* Changes to personal information (name, passport number, job position, etc.) must be reported and the work permit amended

* within 10 working days

* of the change.

* If your employment contract is terminated early, your employer must cancel your work permit

* within 10 working days

* of termination.

11. Summary Checklist -- Quick Reference

Secure a job offer from a legally established Chinese employer.

Employer registers on the

Foreigners' Work Management Service System

Employer submits online application with all documents (work experience certificate, diploma, no criminal record certificate, health check, contract, etc.).

Receive Notification Letter (valid for 3 months).

Apply for Z-visa (or R/F) at Chinese embassy/consulate in your home country.

Enter China (within the visa validity period).

Within 15 days of entry, employer submits original documents for verification to obtain Work Permit.

Within 30 days of entry, apply at local PSB for work-type residence permit.

Begin work legally -- only after both permits are approved.

Ensure permits are extended or amended as required during your stay.

12. Frequently Asked Questions (FAQ)

Q: Can I apply for a work permit without an employer?

A: No. The work permit is tied to a specific employer and position. You must have a confirmed job offer before applying.

Q: Can I start working once I receive my Z-visa?

A: No. You must also obtain the Foreigner's Work Permit (upon arrival in China) and the work-type residence permit before you can legally work.

Q: Do I need a work permit if I am teaching English for just three months?

A: Yes. Any work in China -- paid or unpaid -- requires a work permit and work-type residence permit. Short-term work (≤ 90 days) can be done under an F-visa with a shorter work permit, but this still requires formal approval.

Q: Can I bring my family?

A: Yes. Spouses and children may apply for S-visas or dependent residence permits. They are not automatically included in your work permit -- separate applications are required.

Q: Do I need a Chinese bank account to apply?

A: Not directly, but your employer will need to provide proof of your salary (for the points system) and may need a bank account for 社保 contributions.

Q: What if I already have a work permit but change jobs?

A: Your current work permit must be cancelled, and you (or your new employer) must reapply from scratch -- even if you are staying in the same field.
